

Tyco Fire & Security Obtains Grade A Construction License in China

- World Leader in Fire Safety Industry to Provide Comprehensive Fire Protection Solutions to Customers in China -

Guangzhou, 4 December 2007 - Tyco Fire & Security has been awarded the Grade A Construction License by the China Ministry of Construction. The license allows Tyco Fire & Security to handle high-value fire safety projects for its customers including multinational companies in China. The first foreign multinational company to obtain the license under Closer Economic Partnership Arrangement (CEPA), Tyco Fire & Security will provide a comprehensive range of integrated fire safety solutions to its customers in China.

Through the Grade A Construction License, Tyco Fire & Security will be able to engineer, supply, install, commission and maintain the systems for its customers. Companies in China can enjoy a rich array of superior products and services offered by the world's trusted leader in fire and security industry. Leveraging on its global expertise, Tyco Fire & Security can offer cost-effective solutions to its customers in China.

Mark Barry, President, Tyco Fire & Security Asia, said, "We are delighted to receive the Grade A Construction License in China. We are also excited by the vast opportunities in China where the market potential for fire safety industry is estimated at US$3.7 billion."

"Fire safety plays a vital role in today's business," said Barry. "Companies are increasingly looking for trusted brands in fire protection solutions. With the license, we can provide reliable and one-stop comprehensive fire solutions to our customers. In addition, they will enjoy savings for their businesses through elimination of third-party costs.”

Tyco Fire & Security has obtained the Grade A Construction License through its office in Hong Kong under CEPA. As a free trade agreement between China and Hong Kong, CEPA brings new business opportunities to China, Hong Kong and foreign investors.
